Is the cable tray galvanized or fireproof

Overview

Technical Guidelines for Cable Tray Installation and Outdoor: Hot-dip galvanized or stainless steel trays. Corrosive/High Humidity: Aluminum alloy or fiber.

Key Takeaways

Cable trays can be galvanized for corrosion resistance, and some are specifically fire-rated or fireproof, but standard trays are not inherently fireproof.

Material Composition

Most common cable trays are made from galvanized steel, stainless steel, aluminum, or glass-fiber reinforced plastic. Galvanized steel trays are coated with zinc to prevent corrosion, either pre-galvanized or hot-dip galvanized after fabrication. Field cuts are usually treated with a zinc-rich compound to maintain protection against rust.

Aluminum and stainless steel trays are also corrosion-resistant, while fiberglass trays are lightweight and non-conductive.

Fire Resistance

Standard metal trays, including galvanized steel, are not inherently fireproof. They can withstand some heat but may expand or deform under high temperatures. Fire can spread along combustible cable jackets installed in the tray unless fire-retardant measures are applied.

Fireproof or fire-rated cable trays are specially designed to maintain structural integrity during a fire and prevent flame propagation. These trays may use galvanized steel, stainless steel, powder-coated aluminum, or fiberglass with intumescent coatings to enhance fire resistance. Fire-rated trays are tested to standards such as ISO 834-1, EN 1363-1, DIN 4102-12, and AS/NZS 3013: 2005, and can provide protection for durations like 2 hours at high temperatures.

Selection Considerations

Indoor use: Painted steel or galvanized trays are common. Outdoor or corrosive environments: Hot-dip galvanized, stainless steel, aluminum, or fiberglass trays are preferred. Fire safety requirements: Use fire-rated trays or apply fireproof coatings to cables and trays to comply with safety codes.

In summary, galvanized trays provide corrosion protection, while fireproof or fire-rated trays are engineered to resist fire. Choosing the right tray depends on environmental conditions and fire safety requirements.
