Key Takeaways

Customized fiber optic patch cords typically range from $10 to $50 per unit, with additional setup or delivery fees depending on specifications and order volume.

Pricing Factors

The cost of a customized fiber optic patch cord depends on several key factors: Fiber Type: Single-mode (OS2) or multimode (OM3, OM4, OM5) fibers affect both performance and price. Connector Type: LC, SC, MPO/MTP, or specialty connectors require precise alignment and polishing, which can increase costs. Cable Length and Jacket: Longer cables and specialized jackets (LSZH, armored) add to the unit price.

Customization: OEM/ODM branding, custom labels, or logos typically incur a setup fee of $30–$100, though bulk orders can reduce per-unit costs. Testing and Certification: Patch cords with IL/RL test reports, 3D interferometer measurements, or end-face inspection results may cost more due to quality assurance.

Local Delivery and Additional Fees

In Hong Kong, for example, commercial deliveries may add HK$100, while orders over HK$3,000 can qualify for free delivery. Local suppliers may also offer configurators to calculate prices for specific patch cord configurations.

Lead Time and Availability

Custom patch cords can be manufactured quickly if standard options are used, but specialty cables (e.g., high-power connectors or long epoxy cure times) may require longer lead times. Some suppliers can ship same-day or within 2 days for standard custom orders if placed before a cutoff time.

Summary

For a typical 3-meter LC-LC OS2 patch cord, expect a base price of $10–$50, with additional costs for customization, testing, and delivery. Bulk orders and local suppliers' configurators can help optimize pricing and reduce setup fees. Always confirm lead times and shipping options with the supplier to ensure timely delivery.
