Key Takeaways

Overview

Fireproof aluminum alloy cable trays are lightweight, corrosion-resistant, and designed to support electrical and data cables while providing enhanced fire safety. They are commonly used in industrial, commercial, and infrastructure projects where heat resistance and durability are critical. These trays come in various types, including ladder, perforated, J-shaped, and fully enclosed wireway trays, each offering different levels of airflow, protection, and load capacity.

Price Factors

The cost of fireproof aluminum alloy cable trays depends on several factors: Tray Type: Ladder trays generally cost more than J-shaped or perforated trays due to higher material usage and load capacity. Dimensions: Width, height, and thickness affect the price; larger trays with higher load ratings are more expensive. Fireproof Rating: Trays certified for high fire resistance or UL/ISO fire ratings may carry a premium.
