Price Overview

The cost of a lower right tee for cable trays varies based on material, dimensions, and manufacturer: Aluminum tees: Lightweight and corrosion-resistant, commonly used in commercial and data center installations. Prices generally range from $3 to $25 per piece. Galvanized steel tees: Stronger and suitable for industrial environments, typically priced between $8 and $24 per piece.

Stainless steel tees: Highly corrosion-resistant for harsh or outdoor environments, with prices from $10 to $50 per piece.

Factors Affecting Price

Tray Width and Height: Larger tees (e.g., 24" or 36" wide) cost more than smaller ones (e.g., 6"-12" wide) due to increased material usage. Bend Radius: Tees with larger bend radii or custom angles may increase the price. Supplier and Quantity: Bulk orders or industrial suppliers like Grainger, McMaster-Carr, and Amazon may offer discounts, while small quantities or custom orders can be more expensive.

Finish and Coating: Powder-coated, hot-dip galvanized, or stainless steel finishes add to the cost compared to standard aluminum or mild steel.

Choose the material based on environment and load requirements. Check suppliers like Grainger, McMaster-Carr, Eaton, or Alibaba for current pricing and availability.

Consider bulk orders if multiple tees are needed to reduce cost per unit. By comparing these factors, you can select a lower right tee that balances cost, durability, and compatibility with your cable tray installation.
